“The Washington Center program was truly valuable for me because it gave me a perspective and an insight that I wouldn’t have gotten otherwise. It helped me identify a career goal and tools to move forward with it. The whole semester was divided into different components that were each significantly useful. I have always been interested in economic development and politics, but coming to Washington, DC, and experiencing a whole new spectrum of politics has given me a much bigger perspective. Moreover, my internship site has been extremely beneficial to me. I got a chance to attend American Legislative Exchange Council’s Annual States and Nations Policy Summit in Scottsdale, Arizona, where I met countless new people, state legislators and learned so many new things. It was a perfect testament to the amount of opportunities doing an internship with The Washington Center provides for you. It has helped me grow professionally and get out there to stand out.”
